U.S. Israel Bond Cash Sales Since 1951 Reach $600 Million Mark

A record total of $19,750,000 in State of Israel Bonds, sold in the initial phase of the 1963 Israel Bond drive, was announced at the inaugural conference for Israel Bonds, meeting in Miami, Florida. The 1963 goal is $75,000,000 in Israel Bond sales to provide funds for Israel's program of economic development and immigrant absorption.

Samuel Rothberg, U. S. national campaign chairman of the Israel Bond Organization, who was national chairman of the Conference, estimated that cash sales of Israel Bonds since May, 1951, are at the $600,000,000 mark, and stressed the fact that the first Israel Bonds, which were sold twelve years ago, will be repaid with interest this year, starting May 1, 1963.

Asserting that there will be no peace in the world without a free and independent Israel, Trygve Lie, first Secretary-General of the United Nations, declared that "history will record the establishment of the State of Israel as one of the happiest decisions of the free world." Mr. Lie, who headed the United Nations when its General Assembly voted for the partition of Palestine and the creation of a Jewish State, was the guest of honor at a national celebration of the 15th anniversary of Israel's independence, which was the climax of the Conference.

Citing the stability which Israel has achieved since 1948, Mr. Lie said: "It is gratifying to see how, in the short span of a decade and a half, the fears and anxieties of Israel's friends have been dissipated and the efforts of its enemies to destroy it militarily or throttle its growth have been frustrated. The infant nation of doubtful health has emerged as a veteran of the post-war world.

"The United Nations, the 'midwife' at the birth of the State of Israel, and the creation of Israel as 'one of the best fruits of the desire to bring justice and human decency to a nation which has suffered more than almost any other nation in the world."

Mr. Rothberg stressed the meaning of the first repayment of Israel Bonds this year: "Tonight we can say that Israel's Bond is as good as its word," he said. "Tonight we can say that the Land of Promise has fulfilled its promise — that our faith in Israel has been completely vindicated. Israel's demonstration of its integrity through Israel Bond redemption must be matched and implemented by our own determination to go all out in buying and selling the maximum amount of State of Israel Bonds this year."

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, Finance Minister Levi Eshkol, and Foreign Minister Golda Meir, top leaders of the government of the State of Israel, in cabled messages to the Conference, hailed the beginning of the redemption of Israel Bonds, and called for intensified efforts to help finance Israel's economic conquest of the Negev desert. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion called upon the delegates attending the Conference to join with the people of Israel in securing its economic consolidation, and to "remember the challenges yet unmet and the hundreds of thousands of immigrants yet to come."

U. S. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey said that the more advanced nations of the West should "follow Israel's example of sponsoring programs of direct technical assistance and training in underdeveloped countries. Israel is leading the way in a demonstration of the value of human resources."

Viscount Edwin Samuel, of Great Britain and Israel, said: "Democracy in Israel is uncontaminated as yet by political corruption or by pressure groups, or by the impact of the mass media. Both as Americans and as Jews, this assembled audience of purchasers of Israel Bonds should be extremely proud of Israel in her fifteenth birthday year."

Abraham Feinberg, president of the Israel Bond Organization, pointed out that the Soviet and Arab states are watching Israel's development of new scientific techniques to increase food production and reclaim desert regions. This is of special importance, he said, to those parts of the world whose limited resources cannot cope with their population explosion.

Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice-president of the Israel Bond Organization, said: "Essential projects include the Jordan River-Negev irrigation pipeline, which must be completed by the beginning of next year; the new port at Ashdod, on the Mediterranean, south of Tel Aviv, which will serve as the outlet to the West for the products of the Negev; the establishment of new towns and settlements; the exploitation of oil, copper, phosphates, potash, and other mineral resources; the construction of roads, harbors, and railways; and the building of at least 20,000 housing units during 1963," he said.

Mrs. Arthur J. Goldberg, wife of the Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, emphasized that assistance to Israel helps "to carry out the grand design of our American foreign policy. In the Israel Bond campaign, we not only help Israel. We also, as citizens, play a vital and supporting role in the advancement of our nation's grand design for freedom."

Mrs. Jan Peerce, chairman of the Israel Bond National Women's Division, spoke of the contrast between Israel's economic position today and its situation at the time the Israel Bond drive began twelve years ago. She presided at a Conference session inaugurating the 1963 campaign of the National Women's Division of the Israel Bond Organization. The session also witnessed the premiere of the Israel-International fashion show.

Principal speakers at the Conference included Lawrence G. Leakey, chairman of the executive committee; and Morris W. Berinstein, member of the Israel Bond executive committee and Board of Governors, and former general chairman of the United Jewish Appeal.

Says Nazi-Fascist Revival Does Not Warrant U.S. Libel Law

The American Jewish Congress warned against giving the international anti-Semitic movement "a scope and importance it totally lacks in real life." In a survey of anti-Semitic movements around the world, the Jewish Congress said the danger posed by such groups was "remote rather than immediate, and does not justify any present departure from our traditional concern with the freedoms of speech and expression."

At the same time, however, the survey urged that a "close and careful watch" be kept on the identity, mode of operation, and programs of these organizations. The report listed 23 international meetings of anti-Semitic organizations since 1950. It identified 13 international anti-Semitic groups plus local anti-Semitic organizations in Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States.

The report, prepared by the AJ Congress Commission on International Affairs, was released at a meeting of the national Governing Council at Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th Street, New York. More than 100 Council members attended the meeting at the Congress' policy-making body. Shad Polier, Council chairman, presided.

What begins as a minor irritation certainly may evolve into a major disease. But there is no rule that it must so evolve. And it does no service, except to the racist movement itself, to impute to international anti-Semitism a scope and importance it totally lacks in real life. It is questionable whether the international anti-Semitic movement consists of anything other than a collection of fanatics, crackpots, true believers, and assorted extremists who are thoroughly discredited and completely without power even within those countries in which they claim to be most effective.

The American Jewish community cannot remain indifferent to the danger represented by any actual and growing international anti-Semitic movement. But neither can it accept over-statement of a threat that has no more than a tenuous and insubstantial existence. The Nazi-Fascist revival is not of such urgency or dimension as to warrant support of group libel legislation in the U.S.

There is no hard evidence of a coordinated, well-established or effective international conspiracy for the promotion of anti-Semitism or neo-Fascism. It is true that almost everywhere there are domestic or national groups dedicated to this purpose, and that they have become somewhat more numerous in recent years. But these groups have been a continuing irritant in the public life of Europe and the United States throughout the entire post-war period, and there would appear to be nothing in the recent manifestations of anti-Semitism to support the notion that either their overall membership or their potential threat has become significantly enlarged.

In the absence of a more specific demonstration of genuine menace we do not believe that a reversal of American Jewish opposition to further group libel bills is demanded. Group libel legislation in other countries may be warranted. Whatever may be our position on domestic group libel legislation, we are aware that there may be countries in which the traditions, history, and current unrest of the area make such laws imperative.

While we may not be certain that this is the most effective means of mobilizing the authority and prestige of the United Nations to combat anti-Semitism, we do not oppose recent efforts by various Non-Governmental Organizations, both Jewish and non-Jewish, to press for UN action to outlaw racial incitements to hatred. In sum, we recognize that appreciation and alertness to the fact of a developing international anti-Semitism is a natural and necessary response to prevent outbreaks in various parts of the world.

CALLS ON CHURCH GROUPS OF MAJOR FAITHS TO TAKE DIRECT ACTION AGAINST DISCRIMINATION AND HATE

The National Conference on Race and Religion, an interreligious meeting of all major faiths, called as a religious commemoration of the centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation, sought common ground in the pursuit of interracial justice. Attending in Chicago, Illinois, were 800 lay and clerical leaders from 60 groups.

The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, which was acting as the secretariat, said that this was the first joint meeting of all major faith groups in the United States on a nation-wide basis, says the New York Times. The sponsors said that racial discrimination was a moral problem, and they felt that organized religion had as yet exerted only limited impact upon it.

Two purposes of the meeting were the drafting of a Statement of Conscience and creation of a Follow-up Committee to propose concrete steps. Roman Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant leaders stressed the role of religion in race relations and the need of interfaith action. Albert Cardinal Meyer, Archbishop of Chicago, said:

"The problems that now confront us in our great cities are too manifold and too deep-rooted in human passions and misunderstandings for any of our great religious bodies to deal with them alone."

Cardinal Meyer said that the race question was one to be faced by the entire country, not just one section and was "indeed a pathological infection in our social and political economy. Our whole future as a nation and as a religious [illegible] said.

Dr. Julius Mark, senior rabbi of Temple Emanu-El of New York and president of the Synagogue Council of America, said that the forces of religion must lead, rather than follow, "in this battle to build a society and a world in which the dignity of every human being is jealously guarded."

He noted that segregationists had quoted the Bible to prove some races were superior, but he declared that a great many customs and practices to be found in the Bible merely reflected the customs of ancient society, says the New York Times. J. Irwin Miller, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ, called racial discrimination "a sort of national insanity."

"The religious institutions of this country have the clearest duty to aid and to encourage each practical move and program which they feel works for good toward the removal of remaining areas of racial discrimination and injustice," he said.

Mr. Miller declared that religious bodies should help those discriminated against to "preserve themselves from hatred."

Rabbi Abraham J. Heschel, a professor at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in New York, said that "the history of interracial relations is a nightmare." He added: "Equality as a religious commandment goes beyond the principle of equality before the law."

Religious congregations must take direct community action to fight discrimination and hate, an official of the National Council of Churches said. The proposal was made by the Rev. Dr. Will D. Campbell, an ordained Southern Baptist and a former chaplain at the University of Mississippi, who is associate director of racial and cultural relations of the Council.

In a speech at the National Conference on Religion and Race, he said: "Where in the community that does not offer a local church Inter-Cultural situation — children's [illegible] where's home [illegible] I would trade one week-end of such labor by an interracial group of young people for a year's curriculum in the average Sunday School."

Dr. Campbell, who declared that Protestants numbered among the members of their churches "more racists than perhaps any other religious group in the world," authored a series of suggestions for concrete action, says the New York Times. President Kennedy's anti-discrimination housing order, the clergyman said, offers greater opportunities than ever to promote desegregated neighborhoods, to help Negro home buyers to find white sellers and to offer counsel as long as it is needed.

Dr. Campbell predicted that the housing order, if enforced and sup-

Standards of white, blue, and pink carnations, chrysanthemums, and gladioli were the wedding flowers. There was wedding music played by an orchestra. Jewish Economic Prospects In America, 1963, Look Good

BY WALTER BUCKAT, VOCATIONAL CONSULTANT AND GUIDANCE COUNSELLOR

An analysis of the economic predictions for 1963 might well be compared to a weather forecast: generally fair with seasonal showers and some chance of thunderstorms. One survey conducted by "Nation's Business" found that in the opinion of 60 per cent of the leading corporation heads, 1963 would continue at about the same level as 1962, while 22 per cent feared a decline, and 18 per cent expected an advance.

The pessimists base their prediction on a number of disquisting factors. They point to the failure to cut down unemployment — 5.5 per cent of our working force, about four million persons, continue to remain out of work. Most of these are the unskilled or semi-skilled, the older worker, non-whites, and the handicapped. An especially disturbing fact is the high percentage of young persons, mostly school dropouts, among the unemployed.

Although they constitute about 11 per cent of our working force, almost twice this percentage is unemployed among them. The problem of unemployment becomes increasingly difficult since 800,000 persons enter the labor market annually, while automation threatens to dispossess many from their jobs.

The pessimists also take note of the reduction in the profit margin, our excessive industrial capacity, the intense competition from abroad, our outflow of gold, and the absence of spurs to consumer demand.

The optimists, in contrast, point to the prospective tax cut which should stimulate our economy, to increased capital investments, and to the restoration of business and consumers confidence, as demonstrated by the glowing automobile sales. Consumer spending, they note, is at the level of about $363 billion, a rise of four per cent which they expect to be equalled this year. Sale of appliances such as air conditioners, washing machines, dish washers, etc., which are reaching obsolescence, should show a sharp rise. This increased consumer demand will be joined to high government spending in defense, space exploration, and welfare services, such as health and education.

How will 1963 affect the Jewish population? Since American Jews are overwhelmingly professional, small business, and white collar people, the outlook will differ for each group. Yet it is safe to predict that most of them can reasonably anticipate another good year.

In merchandising, in which Jews are prominent as owners, managers, buyers, and salesmen, sales during 1962 registered about $235 billions. Retail trade in the first ten months topped the previous year by seven per cent and was followed by good holiday sales. Consumer income is at a peak and promises to rise further.

More money is expected to be spent for food in 1963 than in any previous year. The major reasons are our steadily increasing population and the growth of income. The sale of frozen foods is expected to increase. While total food expenditures will increase, there also will be greater competition for the consumer's dollar.

The appliance industry did very well in 1962 and another good year is anticipated. Recent surveys of those intending to buy appliances showed gains over earlier surveys. Often linked with the appliance industry is the sale of radios, T.V. sets, stereophonic and sound reproduction equipment, all of which are expected to enjoy another good year of sales.

However, the outlook for the small shopkeeper continues to be bleak. The continuing growth of the large discount houses and supermarkets has strangled many small shopkeepers. Those who survive have suffered a steady decline in patronage and shrinkage in profits. The exceptions are mainly those shops that render a service not duplicated by the supermarket or discount house. Those who have been forced to liquidate their businesses are usually in the over forty age-group and lack readily marketable skills.

Another industry in which Jews are well represented is plastics, from which many products are produced for home and industrial use. This industry made excellent advances during the past year and present indications suggest that while a slight decline may occur, a basically good year seems likely.

Jews have become increasingly prominent in the construction business — one of our largest industries which accounts for one-ninth of our U.S. gross national product. Because so many industries and products are related to it, construction is a crucial segment of our economy. There are about a half million firms engaged in construction. Last year their volume was about eight per cent higher than 1961. An approximate increase of five per cent by the end of next year is anticipated.

Private housing construction, however, may decline in the first half of 1963, due to overbuilding in some areas and to the fact that one- and two-family dwellings may drop in price. Commercial and industrial construction is also expected to slow down due to overbuilding of office space, shopping centers, and to the existence of an excess manufacturing capacity. The decline, however, is expected to be temporary.

The long-term outlook is considered good because of the steady increase of population and the growing marriage rate — which will result in a continued high demand for housing. Other positive factors in the housing picture are high-level personal income, modernization of metropolitan core areas, and the continuing exodus to suburbia.

Public construction will increase during the first half of 1963, due largely to additional funds provided by the last Congress. More money will also be available for highway building and other construction projects, such as military installations, schools, hospitals, religious, social, and recreational facilities.

A significant segment of our Jewish population is engaged in training for professional and technical careers. These careers have experienced extraordinary growth. From less than half a million professionals in the United States in 1870, we now have more than seven and one-half million. During the past 60 years, the percentage of professional workers has almost tripled. Even during the past ten years, the rate of growth of the professions was nearly twice that of clerical workers, the second fastest growing occupational group.

A primary reason for the growth of professional and related occupations has been the development of new professional fields. Engineering, scientific, and allied professions, have grown phenomenally in recent years, in contrast to medicine, law, teaching, and the ministry whose growth has been much slower. Some professions, such as social and personnel work, were virtually unknown fifty years ago.

Many Jews have long been attracted to professional occupations, and the outlook in this area is good. This means that people currently preparing to enter, or who are now practicing teaching on all levels, engineering, accountancy, the ministry, all the physical and social sciences, even those with relatively ordinary talents, may anticipate a good income and work that can prove interesting and challenging.

Another fast growing occupational field is administration, a term which covers a wide variety of business and governmental jobs and which now embraces over seven million persons. Our colleges are filled with students, many of them Jews, who are majoring in some phase of business administration. Only relatively few of the colleges, however, give adequate preparation for this work, as a recent survey of these schools scathingly demonstrated. One of the few major courses which gives business students solid and readily applicable skills is accounting.

For non-professional and non-administrative white collar workers such as salesmen, clerical workers, and others, the outlook for experienced and well-trained persons is highly satisfactory. There is a steady demand for skilled secretaries, typists, bookkeepers, and office machine operators in business or in government jobs. Even the older woman who is competent in these occupations can find work without great difficulty.

While proportionately about twice as many Jews enter professional fields as do non-Jews, this still leaves a large percentage of young Jews without college or professional training. Such young people need not be discouraged, however. Ample opportunities for well-paying and satisfying jobs are available in such fields as

You can use the plan for all or only some of your European stopovers, thus creating your own travel programme. You visit only the places that interest you . . . and at the all-inclusive price you select. KLM's new booklet: "Gateway to Travel Enchantment" gives you all the details.

8. KLM's Fly-Now-Pay-Later Plan permits you to fly now at a low-down payment and offers you many months to pay the balance. In addition to covering your roundtrip ticket, it can also be used for all-inclusive tours, hotels and sightseeing. Only 10% down. Ask your Travel Agent or KLM for complete details. Point to note: children travel at big discounts with KLM. Under twelve, they save 50%; under two, 90% of the fare, all the year round.

9. The world's first air booking office was opened in Amsterdam in 1921—by KLM. And KLM was the first airline to fly a regular intercontinental service. This route, more than 9,000 miles each way, connected Amsterdam and Java. Until 1940, this was the longest scheduled air service in the world. KLM was the first European airline to operate a regular service across the North Atlantic after World War II.

10. KLM has had longer than any other airline to perfect its reliability—44 years. The initials KLM stand for Koninklijke Luchtvaart Maatschappij. This is the Dutch for Royal Aviation Company. Just KLM will do—it's known all over the world. KLM carries an average of 3830 passengers every day—about twice the capacity of a big ocean liner.

11. Every DC-8 jet carries enough fuel to fly 1100 extra miles. The extra fuel load is equivalent to 12,000 kgs. (26,460 lbs) of paying freight. KLM believes that security is worth the expense. Instruments in the cockpit of every KLM DC-8 jet enable the flight engineer to check the complete mechanical system of the plane every hour while in flight. This is another example of KLM thoroughness.

12. KLM flies to every continent in the world. KLM has been established in Canada since 1946 and now has offices in principal Canadian cities. Something worth noting: KLM has daily flights out of Montreal and New York for Europe. During the peak Summer season, you can choose from nine weekly flights from Montreal and four daily flights from New York.

13. See your Travel Agent. Having themselves been professionals in the field of air transportation for 44 years, KLM recognize that it takes professionals to plan trips efficiently. In every city in Canada, KLM is represented by a professional—your Travel Agent.

JEWISH PROSPECTS

depend largely on their age, experience, and demand for their skills. They may wish to avail themselves of the counseling and placement services offered by the Jewish Vocational Service, found in the principal cities of the United States and Canada.

The need for qualified Jewish men and women to serve as rabbis, cantors, educators, social workers, and for other Jewish communal functions grows increasingly urgent. Although salaries have steadily risen — for example, starting salaries for rabbis range from $7,500 to $10,000 a year, the supply seriously trails behind the demand. This is especially true in small outlying communities.

Salaries for Jewish educators and administrators are also rising, though not sufficiently. Despite earnest efforts to recruit teachers, the results have been discouraging. Similarly in social work; there are hundreds of jobs available in case work agencies, homes for the aged, Jewish centers, Jewish vocational service agencies, as well as in other Jewish institutions.

It is unnecessary to emphasize the importance of attracting qualified and idealistic persons in the service of the religious, cultural, and communal needs of American Jewry. Certainly, it is deplorable that the most affluent Jewish community in history does not make better provision for its communal requirements.

"Rear-Guard Soldiers" Make Israeli Army Insignia

If any of the Israeli soldiers should visit the old age homes of Malben, the Joint Distribution Committee welfare program for aged, ill, and handicapped newcomers in Israel, they can be sure of an enthusiastic reception from their "rear-guard" colleagues. Dozens of elderly women, residents of the fifteen homes maintained by JDC-Malben, with United Jewish Appeal funds, feel as much part of the army as the soldiers themselves, for they are busy at their sewing machines and work tables in the occupational therapy rooms and workshops, producing thousands of insignia, arm bands, and skull caps on special order for the Ministry of Defense.

Landing the contract itself was a major achievement. The elderly residents of the Malben homes have often shown their public spirit by going to the polls in great numbers at election time, by making contributions from their meager pocket money for various fund raising drives, and in other ways. But to work for the army, the pride of all Israelis, this was their greatest joy.

Their achievement was so much sweeter since they won the contract in competition with regular business enterprises in Israel. The Defense Ministry originally ordered the skull caps (kipot) from private firms but the quality of the machine-made products did not quite measure up. Aware of the skill and patience of the elderly immigrant women in producing needlework, the Ministry gave these craftsmen a sample order. This was satisfactorily completed and soon additional orders followed.

The women are now producing some 2,500 kipot; 3,000 insignia for non-commissioned officers; and a large number of arm bands for the military police. They have also received a substantial order for arm bands from the Israeli police force. The women have greeted the orders with great enthusiasm. Recently they even asked for permission to work overtime (during afternoon hours) in order to complete the order quickly. Permission was granted. There was even competition among the residents to take part in the work.

And now many of the aged women, who consider themselves rear-guard soldiers, nourish the secret hope that one day soon they may meet a few of the front line soldiers wearing the insignia they produced with such skill and devotion.

Lively Major Work By Yemenite Rabbi Wins Bialik Prize

BY I. KAMAI, OF THE REZEL INSTITUTE, IN NEW YORK

A few weeks ago Israel's most coveted literary award, the Bialik Prize, was given to Rabbi Joseph Kapheh, a Yemenite scholar whose book, "Halikhot Teman," has become a cause for sharp dissension within Israel's Yemenite community. Notwithstanding the fact that Rabbi Kapheh is the first Yemenite to be given the Bialik Prize, many Yemenites in Israel protested against this step, maintaining that "Halikhot Teman" should not have been published in the first place. Their bitterness reminded one of earlier religious dissensions in Jewish history, such as those which occurred during the period of Shabbatai Zevi, and subsequently, during the past century when the Hassidim and their opponents were at loggerheads.

Two generations ago, the grandfather of Rabbi Joseph Kapheh, Rabbi Yahya, initiated a Yemenite "Enlightenment" movement called "Dor Deah". Rabbi Yahya and his group in San'a, Yemen, fought for the abolition of the study of Kabbalah, and specifically the Zohar, and advocated school reform and the teaching of trades to children. They were also against many superstitions which were widely held among Yemenites at that time. However, the reformers remained a minority in the Yemenite community, and when they reached Israel the struggle between the opposing groups continued.

The ultra-Orthodox Yemenite group now charges that Rabbi Joseph Kapheh disregards in his new work a large part of the Yemenite Jewish community and its sacred traditions, and asserts that the "Dor Deah" group won out in the struggle. However that may be, there is no denying that the book is a veritable treasure house of Yemenite Jewish life, lore, education, tradition, customs and superstitions. It also contains a thorough description of family life, of the Jewish-Yemenite house and utensils, school and play, society and public life.

In his introduction to the book, Rabbi Kapheh says: "Originally this work was not destined for publication, and was written solely for my own pleasure. When I arrived in the Holy Land some twenty years ago with my wife and children and settled in Tel Aviv . . . I felt rather lonely, and my only comfort was to sit down and describe the life of the past."

It seems, therefore, that Rabbi Kapheh never intended to give a comprehensive description of life and customs of all Jewish communities in Yemen. He concentrated on the way of life and the customs of the Jews of San'a and its environs, describing Jewish life from birth to death, and from the beginning of the year to its end. He dwelt at length on the customs and the way of life as known and vividly remembered by him.

The book is written with real literary talent, and is suffused with a deep knowledge of the Jewish literary sources of all ages. The style of Rabbi Kapheh is lively, and his book is an important contribution to the still scanty literature about the many tribes of Israel now gathered in the Jewish land.

All this, however, remained unappreciated by the "opposition." It was feared that hostile demonstrations would take place at the Bialik House in Tel Aviv, when Mayor Namir was about to hand the prize to the Rabbi. A day earlier, the Mayor [illegible] opponents of the Yemenite opponents of Rabbi Kapheh's book, who demanded that the prize be withheld from the author.

The Mayor explained to the protesting delegates that the judges who make the annual awards of the Bialik Prize are absolutely independent in their decisions and cannot be influenced by anyone. He asked the delegations to calm down and to prevent this dissension from spreading. "The right way to oppose a book is to write another book based on historical and scholarly facts."

Rabbi Kapheh was born in 1919 in San'a, Yemen, and came to Israel in 1943. In 1952 he became a member of the Rabbinical Court in Tel Aviv, and a year later a member of the Rabbinical Court in Jerusalem. He has published several essays and scholarly treatises, a philosophical work by Rabbi Nathaniel, and a book, "Meor Hasfala," by Nathaniel Ben Isaiah, both of whom were Yemenite authors who lived in the Middle Ages.

"Halikhot Teman" appeared more than a year and a half ago, and was lauded by several Israeli scholars and critics as the most outstanding and original scholarly work written in recent times by a member of the Yemenite community on Yemenite history and lore.

BEERSHEBA, AN ARAB VILLAGE IN 1948, IS NOW FRONTIER TOWN OF 60,000

In Beersheba, where Abraham dug his well, modern Israel's new frontier begins. The taming of the wilderness stretching into the Negev, 5,000 square miles of sand, eroded soil and mountains, is one of the main goals Premier David Ben-Gurion has set for this generation of Israelis.

Beersheba is the gateway through which pass Israel's pioneers in the conquest of the Negev. It was a small Arab village of a few thousand inhabitants when Israel was formed in 1948, writes W. Granger Blair, in the New York Times. Since then it has mushroomed into a bustling, crude, frontier town of 60,000 polyglot settlers. New factories and blocks of housing have spread over the treeless, dun-colored hills away from the old Arab center of town.

Some esthetic relief has lately been provided by the Desert Inn, a new luxury hotel that captures the flavor of the desert and its nomadic culture in a modern architectural setting, including a swimming pool. It was built to spur the tourist industry in the northern Negev.

From Beersheba it is an easy journey east to the new settlements in the Dead Sea region and to the spectacular ruins of King Herod's mountain-top palace overlooking the lowest spot on the world's surface. Equally accessible, to the south, are the restored Nabatean and Byzantine cities of Avdat and Subeita.

Down a narrow side street in the old Arab quarter of Beersheba is the Last Chance Bar. It is appropriately named because 155 miles of sparsely settled, parched desert separate Beersheba from Elath, the Red Sea port that is Israel's southernmost point and the terminus of the Negev's central highway.

In the Last Chance and in the cafes scattered about town one can encounter the settlers, informal in dress and in language, who are quick to talk about the difficulties of wresting a livelihood from the land but just as quick to reject any suggestion that it cannot be done.

Inevitably the conversation is about water. This is a paramount need of the nation, and nowhere more so than in the Negev, says the New York Times. To meet it engineers and scientists are working on projects to tap the Jordan River and to turn sea water into sweet water.

Some of the work in hydrology is going on in Beersheba at the Negev Institute for Arid Zone Research. Experiments also are being carried out there in solar energy, desert soils, and crop strains, all designed to help push the rim of habitation and cultivation farther and farther south into the desert.

Beersheba still fills, with some 20th century variations, its ancient role as a gathering place for the desert nomads. Once a week the Bedouins in their flowing robes and headdresses, held in place by a double coil of black sheep wool or goat hair, go there to trade. There are about 17,000 Bedouins in the Negev and in many respects their way of life has hardly changed in centuries.

The night before the market opens the Bedouins begin the trek to town from their goatskin tent encampments south and east of Beersheba. They bring camels, sheep, and goats. Sometimes the men arrive in trucks while the veiled women follow on donkeys.

As the sun rises, trading begins in an open spot at the edge of the city. The animals become noisy, the dust rises as the bargaining warms and the tribal groupings shift about the market area. While the women squat in the dust their men haggle with buyers from Beersheba or Tel Aviv or Nazareth.

By mid-morning most of the trading is finished. Some of the Bedouins begin the trip back to the distant encampments while others linger, says the New York Times, purchasing utensils and other goods at the Jewish market before they, too, disappear into the desert.

TO SAVE THE MEMORY OF THE SIX MILLION

BY RUFUS LEARSI, AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORIAN, AND CHAIRMAN OF THE SEDER RITUAL COMMITTEE, 15 EAST 84TH STREET, NEW YORK 28

"Let us never forget!" was the cry that resounded among Jews when the cold-blooded murder by Nazi Germany of Six Million of their kin became known.

To remember with reverence and love was, they felt, not only a debt which they owed their martyred dead. It was also a duty they owed to themselves and their posterity. For to remember means to face stern realities sternly, to reject soothing illusions, to be warned and forewarned.

But memory, unaided, is elusive and unstable. We don't remember because we are commanded or exhorted to remember — not even because we have resolved to remember. And this is especially true of a painful memory. The process known in psychology as repression sets in, and the memory sinks into the limbo of the subconscious.

It was a healthy instinct, therefore that impelled sensitive men and women to devise instruments for keeping the memory alive. The list of such aids is impressive. It includes museums and documentation centers, among which the Yad Vashem in Jerusalem; the Yivo in New York; and the Contemporary Jewish Documentation Center, in Paris, are the best known.

It includes what has become known as "catastrophe literature," embracing, among other works, a sizable number of volumes in Yiddish commemorating obliterated Jewish communities. It includes the Martyrs and Heroes Remembrance Day decreed by the Knesset in 1959 and observed at memorial meetings in larger Jewish centers. Monuments have been erected in cemeteries, tablets have been set up in institutions.

All of these instruments are, no doubt, useful weapons in the struggle to remember. Nevertheless, we owe it to the purpose to which they are all consecrated to appraise them realistically and objectively. That purpose is to save the memory from repression and oblivion, to keep it alive and functioning. To save it not just for the few, but the many. To save it not alone for ourselves of this day and generation, but for the generations after us.

Each of the instruments cited and all others should, therefore, be confronted with two tests and required to meet them both: One: Is the means in question valid only for the short present, but for the long future also? What, to use a well understood phrase, is its life expectancy? Two: What is the extent of its impact? Does it reach out and encompass the masses of our people, or is its range restricted to limited groups?

Will any of the instruments listed above sustain these tests? Museums and documentation centers do not attract the multitudes. The memorial books will gather dust on library shelves, their language unfamiliar even to the progeny of their authors and compilers. Memorial meetings on Remembrance Day, a day generally unobserved, will not become more numerous, nor will the attendance, never large, become larger. Monuments tend to become hackneyed features of a landscape, taken for granted and unnoticed.

It should be emphasized that the proposed tests are not meant to belittle those instruments or to suggest they should be scrapped. They should, on the contrary, be strengthened and multiplied. They are serving a noble and useful purpose, and the men and women who created them are entitled to our esteem and gratitude. Nevertheless, the sacred purpose they have in common would be ill served by nursing illusions about them, expecting more from them than they can give.

Is there a way of remembering that does meet these tests? There is, and the principle on which it is based is the same one that has given strength and endurance to all the crucial memories of the Jewish past. It is the principle of enshrining a memory in a recurrent observance and ritual, an observance that defies the tooth of time and endears itself to the masses of the people.

The Seder Ritual of Remembrance meets these tests. Linked as it is to a millenial observance, it will save the memory of our martyrs and heroes for the generations to come as well as our own. The Passover Seder, moreover, draws an exceptionally large attendance, including a high proportion of our young. The Ritual, therefore, will preserve the memory not just for limited groups, but for the great multitudes of our people.

The Ritual is brief but deeply moving, and it lifts up the Seder to a new and exalted level. It consists of a brief passage in Hebrew followed by a rendition of it into English, and concludes with the singing of Ani Maamin ("I Believe"), the hymn with which many of the martyrs in the liquidation camps went to their deaths.

In every sector of the community, Orthodox, Conservative, Reform, and unaffiliated, the Ritual is gaining ever wider acceptance. It answers the need in a manner that is instinctively felt to be fitting and effective.

W.J.C. Urges Nations Harboring Nazis To Extradite For Trial

An appeal to all nations harboring Nazi criminals to turn them over for trial by the competent authorities was issued by the World Jewish Congress in New York. A meeting of the administrative committee consisting of key Jewish leaders all over the world, was told by the president, Dr. Nahum Goldmann, that the World Jewish Congress has been cooperating with West German and Austrian authorities in tracing about 1,000 witnesses for investigations of Nazis. These investigations cover about 1,000 different cases and involve some 5,000 Nazis charged with participation in the mass murders of European Jewry.

Dr. Goldmann said that the urgency in bringing these criminals to trial was due to the fact that the statute of limitations concerning such crimes comes into effect in 1965. The World Jewish Congress leaders studied the problem of the prosecution of war criminals and appealed to all nations to cooperate with West German, Austrian, and other authorities in extraditing Nazi criminals who have enjoyed immunity from such action.

Dr. Goldmann said that one of the main problems facing the prosecuting authorities is the shortage of documentation due particularly to deliberate destruction of evidence by the Nazis themselves, as well as to the difficulty in tracing the few survivors of the Nazi murders, who today are scattered all over the world. Governmental and civic bodies as well as individuals were asked to help in uncovering Nazis, in locating and turning over any available information, and in tracing witnesses. The criminals involved are not only German and Austrian Nazis but also Latvians, Estonians, Lithuanians, Croatians, and Ukrainians, many of whom have found sanctuary in South and Central American lands, as well as in Spain, Italy and other countries.

Dr. Goldmann said that the difficulties were compounded by the lack of public knowledge of the Nazi crimes and of the Hitler era. He emphasized the need for the widest possible dissemination of all information that might put an end to such public indifference. He pledged his organization's complete support in the efforts to bring war criminals to book for their crimes.

Participating in the meeting were: Samuel Bronfman, Dr. Moises Goldman, and Dr. Arieh Tartakower, chairmen, respectively, of the North American, South American, and Israeli Executive branches of the Congress; Dr. Israel Goldstein, honorary vice-president of the WJC; Dr. Isaac Goldenberg, president of the DAIA, the representative body of Argentinian Jewry; Dr. Tobias Kamenezain, president of the Buenos Aires Jewish Community; Dr. Joachim Prinz, chairman of the American Section, and president of the American Jewish Congress; Saul Hayes, Q.C., executive vice-president of the Canadian Jewish Congress; Maurice Ashkanasy, Q.C., president of the executive council of Australian Jewry; Max Greenstein, treasurer of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies; Dr. H. van Dam, secretary general of the Zentralrat der Juden, the central representative Jewish body in Germany; Dr. Gerhart M. Riegner, of Geneva; Anselm Reiss, and Yitzhak Gross, of Israel; Alex L. Easterman, J. Halevy, Joseph Linton, and Dr. S. Roth, of London; Pierre Dreyfus-Schmidt, and Armand Kaplan, of Paris; Shad Polier, Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, Will Maslow, Dr. Natan Lerner, Monty Jacobs, and W. Pulvermann, of New York.

CALLS ON CHURCH GROUPS OF MAJOR FAITHS

He also suggested that congregations review their education and recruitment patterns, train young people, and recruit and offer scholarships for Negroes in all-white colleges and universities seeking Negro students. Some of them have found no Negro students to apply, Dr. Campbell noted.

He said that African clergymen should come as "missionaries to America."

"But it can't be done in the old patronizing manner; in thinking something virtuous in seeing the 'cute and quaint' African costumes on Sunday mornings or during Brotherhood Week," he said. "Rather we must ask [them] because we need the freshness of their preaching, because we need their ministry for the health of our souls."

Dr. Campbell also praised a movement among seminary students to send white students to serve as assistants in Negro congregations and vice versa. He said that the situation in Mississippi was worse than its most severe critics said but that it was nonetheless "typical" of the rest of the country.

"There is a subtle Oxford almost daily in the average American city," he declared.

A call for religious action against discrimination was sounded also by R. Sargent Shriver Jr., Peace Corps director. He urged congregations to "bury religious laissez-faire in racial problems", says the New York Times. He said this would encourage each member to pledge part of his time to remove racial barriers at work, at play and at worship.

Mr. Shriver, who is vice chairman of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, made his observations in a speech at the dinner meeting of the Conference.

Dan W. Dodson, director of New York University's Center for Human Relations and Community Studies, said research indicated that the vast majority of the middle class in an average community would attempt to sit on the sidelines when racial controversy arose. Communities have been integrated by small action groups, he said.

The four-day National Conference on Religion and Race, meeting at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago, was described as the first common meeting on this subject of top leaders of the three major religious faiths. Seventy groups have sent more than 600 delegates.

A result was a Declaration of Conscience and a blueprint for national and community action. These, however, will not be binding on the individual groups.
